STANFORD, KY., FRIDAY, JANUARY 12, 1906.

NO. 96.

Interesting Letter From a Sister of Mrs. L. M. Omer, Who is a Missionary in India.

A small hut, next to a Mohammedan's slaughter house—muddy and altogether uninviting the approach to it—the little room, eight by 12 feet, is dark, the only light comes through the low doorway, the floor is muddy to-day for the rain fell heavily last night and the old roof was not proof against such a siege. The doorway is so low that one must enter humbly—the walls are of mud and dark and damp. There is a little veranda place in front four feet wide, and to-day as the heavy gray clouds have rolled themselves together and left room for the sunbeams to enter, this veranda is an interesting place for this is the Gorella school and the little girls are gathering. "A shame!" I hear some of them exclaim. "Why do you not get a better place than that?" "Well, friends, walk with me up and down the muddy streets and let us find a better one—we can not—the homes from which these children have come are worse, much worse. This has two outside doors, low, 'tis true, but the fresh air can get in and some of the houses from which these girls come, have no outside door to the dark, damp sleeping room and the floors are soggy and emit all unpleasant odors—this room to us is dark—to them it is almost light. Why, here is a little girl, the daughter of a rich merchant; her father has a large shop in the bazaar, but back of the shop, where the women live—where the mother's life is passed—the room is dark and damp, muddy under foot. This is sufficient reason for making the school room beautiful and attractive?" "Yes, I know"—and the teacher sighs as she thinks over it. But the children are gathering, bright eyed girls—and brightly dressed they are, nearly all daughters of merchants, but loud voiced—their play room is the bazaar street. The months come and go—whispers of the dread plague are in the air. The school prospers—25 girls now, and getting along nicely. But this plague, some one died yesterday—another to-day. The children any their people will not let them come to the school, that the missionaries are responsible for all this trouble—but some still come the school is only half its size now. The missionary is ill too and the teachers are giving their evenings to Zenana and Bible work since their class work stopped. Then the whisper is spoken loudly—"there is plague in the bazaar. In the midst of the homes of the little girls." The school is closed. The teachers go out to the villages to teach, but the villagers are afraid on account of the plague, to have them come, and the weeks pass on—P'yari, shuddering at the idea of plague, hungering for her people and her sister's home, asks for leave—Sakri Bai and her husband have gone to Bilaspur, even Eaggabai has left, and this all while the missionary mother was not yet able to take up work with her wee baby in her arms.

Other changes have come, too, this dread plague raged in Bilaspur, and there the orphanage mother carried the burden of 120 lives on her heart. We asked her to come to us, for as yet there was no whisper of the sickness having reached here—and she came—our little chapel was turned into a dormitory, the carpenter shop also was fitted up to be as comfortable as possible and another hut was arranged, this to shelter the girls until the sheds could be made ready. Miss Kingsbury and Miss Gentry were with us and we found cheer and comfort in having them. Under the old Mohura tree a large place was cleared, beaten hard and plastered—this to be for the meetings on Sundays. Around the Nest, that little grasshouse which first sheltered the missionaries here, a place was cleared, shorn of its grass and jungle growth and made ready as the school room for the girls, for soon the new quarters were finished and they moved in—a large square, a house on three sides, built of grass and bamboos and hastily cut timbers.

We have found our Christian Endeavor work very dear and helpful: though only 10 of our young people attend regularly, they are praying together for the work. Our home numbers four now, and baby Miriam, whose loving little face was first seen last January, has found a place in the very heart center of our dear home. Theodora says, with a proud, happy look in her eyes: "She is ours, isn't she mother." Seldom a day goes by but we hear our girlie rejoicing in the ownership of this little sister. And just as joyously, though with a deep gratitude for His goodness, we older ones look upon these two. "They are ours." And this little band of dark faces that gather about on the first days bringing their children to be petted, their sick for medicine, their wayward ones for reproof—this little band is ours also—ours to live for, to suffer with, to rejoice over, ours to make ready for His coming. During the year eight have been added to this little band and into the homes three little black-eyed babies have come.

We want to thank you for your interest, your help. Especially has California made us feel that she is, indeed, laboring with us here. It has been strength to us. Florence Briscoe's name is very lovingly spoken in our household.

Our Father is working in us and for us. Pray that this year He may work through us with power, that the cause here may be strengthened and His Kingdom come. BESSIE FAURAU MADSEN.

The Interior Journal.

E. C. WALTON.

THE Kentucky State Journal voices our sentiments to a "Y" when it says: "The Legislature should not fail to make an appropriation for the Jamestown Exposition. It will be the most interesting of the series of expositions and Kentucky owes it to the mother State to help her make the enterprise a success, and at the same time advance her own interests. Every foot of ground in the Jamestown section is doubly historic, having been made so by the Revolutionary and Civil wars, and a visit to it is one of the greatest things to look forward to in 1907. We hope the General Assembly will be as liberal as possible in making appropriation for representation at the exposition to commemorate the four hundredth anniversary of the settlement of the Old Dominion."

THE bill to pension Confederate soldiers introduced by Senator O. P. Hogan is a good one. It is provided that each deserving Confederate soldier now in the Confederate Home and who has a wife, be given the per capita allowed by the State, which is $175 a year. This is suggested because the Confederate Home at Pewee Valley is overcrowded and many of those in the Home have wives whom they would like to have with them. The $175 under the bill, is to be paid in 12 monthly installments. In justice to the dear old fellows, the bill ought to pass so that they can spend their last days with their families and not be compelled to live and die away from their loved ones.

PEACE didn't come too soon even for Japan. It is announced that provinces containing nearly 3,000,000 inhabitants are suffering the worst famine of 60 years. Russia is suffering local famines and general disorder, and the Finance Minister is facing a deficit of $24,000,000. Suppose the war had continued, but little would have been left of either country.

THE lynching industry is the only one that showed a falling off in 1905. Only 66 men were murdered by mobs; bad enough, it is true, but as compared with the 90 lynchings of the preceding year and with the average of 134 lynchings a year between 1894 and 1903, it is an indication of marked progress inciviliation.

LAST year in the United States and Canada there was destroyed by fire property worth $175,157,800, taking no account of unregistered and unchronicled fire waste of which the insurance companies keep no memorandum. No other nation could carry such a loss and not seem to feel it.

RECORDS show that there were 200 more deaths than births in Nashville in 1905. It is calculated that at this rate the city will become extinct in 2286. However, if it does, those who are making the calculations now will never know if they were right or not.

Until quite recent times the sons of priests could not legally undertake any lay occupation, and were therefore compelled to enter the priesthood in their turn. All class privileges and distinctions have now been swept away, but as a matter of fact, the priesthood is still recruited almost exclusively among the sons of priests exactly as before.

MUST NOT LOAF IN SALOONS. Through the work of small camera many employees of the Louisville & Nashville railroad have lost their jobs at Corbin. The company issued strict orders against loafing in saloons, but many failed to obey the rule. An unknown agent with a kodak got telling evidence by snap shots, and as a result 20 employees have been discharged. Some of the discharged men have been in the employ of the company for years. Officials say the rule will be enforced if every man has to be fired.

BANK DIRECTORS. - At a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank Tuesday the old board of directors was re-elected. The following gentlemen compose the directory: F. Reid, S. H. Baughman, M. D. Elmore, K. L. Tanner, T. P. Hill, J. H. Baughman, James Robinson, J. M. Pottus, S. T. Harris, J. S. Hocker, C. E. Tate.

Good. - The Eighth and Eleventh districts will be special objects of attention this year by the Redistricting Committee of the General Assembly. Representative J. M. Alverson is said to have a bill up his sleeve providing for shifting Casey county out of the Eleventh back to the Eighth. A similar bill will be introduced by Senator Huddle in the Upper House. - Courier Journal. Putting the "State of Casey" in a democratic district will be of inestimable benefit to her politically and otherwise. It will stir the democrats to action and ere many years that good county will be as reliably democratic as Lincoln.

MILLER IN TROUBLE. - Midshipman John P. Miller, of Lancaster, who has been expected to graduate at the head of his class next month, was put under arrest on charges of hazing Henry G. Cooper, Jr., of Oxford, N. C., and Max B. Demott, of Niles, Mich., members of the fourth class, says an Annapolis dispatch. The charges are under the act of 1874, which provides the penalty of expulsion upon conviction of hazing, and the act of 1903, which sets the same penalty for "encouraging or countenancing hazing." Cooper is the midshipman who was stricken with paralysis while in a class room about a month ago. It is not known however, that the charges against Miller are connected in any way with this incident. The character of the specifications has not been made public. Miller is Cadet Lieutenant in command of the Twelfth company.

USEFUL NOTE BOOK. - Cashier W. M. Bright is giving to the patrons and friends of the Lincoln County National Bank a useful note book or memorandum. It is splendidly bound and besides being a diary, contains a great deal of valuable information. It also has a brief history of the bank since its organization, Feb. 7, 1870, with John H. Shanks, president, John B. Owsley, cashier, and Thomas C. Hunter, Richard Cobb, Robert B. Woods, John H. Shanks, George W. James, Thomas W. Miller, Asher Owsley, Thomas J. Foster and S. H. Shanks as directors. Of this directory only the two last named are now living. The bank was first known as the Deposit Bank of Stanford, but on Sept. 8th of the year it was organized the name was changed to the Farmers National Bank. On Jan. 1, 1889, it became the Lincoln National Bank and on Sept. 8, 1890, it was changed to a State Bank and known as the Farmers Bank & Trust Co. On Aug. 15, 1893, it became a national bank again and the present name of Lincoln County National Bank was given it. During its long existence this bank has never failed to pay a semi-annual dividend and has not only returned to the stockholders the amount of capital stock but paid them in addition $90,000 in surplus and undivided profits.

Under a well printed picture of Francis J. Weatherford, the Frankfort Journal says: "Young Mr. Weatherford was appointed his page by Speaker Lawrence. He is a bright and manly son of Mr. J. G. Weatherford, of Lincoln county, and a nephew of the well-known Col. George Weatherford, proprietor of the Weatherford Hotel, one of the most noted hostleries in the State."
